JCHC is thrilled to announce we've been selected as one of 24 organizations statewide (out of 180 applications) to receive a new Wingspan grant from PA Humanities! Through this program for 12 Rural organizations and 12 BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, People of Color) organizations committed to community-based humanities work, we are receiving significant funding for our new project, Community History Storytelling. The funds are restricted for use on this new project only.

We will use videography to interview county residents, film historic locations and create vignettes for our new JCHC YouTube Channel and also on our website. Videos can also be integrated into new exhibits. This grant will fund our project over two years, beginning January 2024. We're also joining the statewide Wingspan Learning Community where we can network with peers from the other organizations, share resources, and learn together.

Funding for this grant is made possible with the generous support from Spring Point Partners, and additional funding from PA Humanities, individual donors and the National Endowment for the Humanities (NEH).
